Section 1 of the Equality Act 2010: the socio-economic duty A briefing for Greater Manchester local authorities and their partners

Introduction

This briefing is intended for local authority officers and councillors in England to assist their understanding of Section 1 of the Equality Act 2010, the socio-economic duty, and their planning for COVID-19 recovery.

What is the socio-economic duty?

It has been ten years since the Equality Act 2010¹ came into force. This Act brought together 116 pieces of anti-discrimination legislation in order to tackle disadvantage more effectively. The duty contained in Section 1 of the Equality Act 2010 would require public authorities to pay due regard to the way in which their decisions increase or decrease inequalities that result from socio-economic disadvantage.

Successive UK Governments have failed to commence the socio-economic duty in England, which means that public authorities in England are not technically bound by Section 1.

Why is reducing socio-economic inequalities important?

Poverty in the UK remains a significant issue. 14.4 million people in the UK are living in families in poverty. Greater Manchester Poverty Action (GMPA) estimates that 620,000 people were living in poverty in Greater Manchester at the start of 2020, and that this figure is likely to have increased during the pandemic.²

COVID-19 has foregrounded existing socio-economic inequalities, disproportionately affecting people who are Black, Asian, and Minority Ethnic (BAME),³ disabled,⁴ and/or on the lowest incomes.⁵

Current implementation

In April 2018, the Fairer Scotland Duty came into force as Section 1 of the Equality Act 2010 in Scotland.⁶ This duty requires local authorities to actively consider how they could reduce inequalities of outcome in any major strategic decision they make; and to publish a written assessment, showing how they have done this.

After extensive consultations, the Welsh Government plans to enact the duty in 2021 as part of its programme to help public bodies deliver A More Equal Wales.⁷

Unfortunately, the duty is not yet implemented in England or Northern Ireland. However, there are a number of English local authorities who are undertaking activities designed to tackle socio-economic disadvantage and therefore are acting in the spirit of the duty. Newcastle City Council⁸ and North of Tyne Combined Authority⁹ have gone the furthest and have decided to treat the duty as if it were enacted.

Calls for implementation

In 2016, the UN Committee on Economic, Social, and Cultural Rights called on the UK Government to “bring into force the relevant provisions of the Equality Act that refer to the public authorities’ duty on socio-economic disadvantage ... in order to enhance and guarantee full and effective protection against discrimination in the enjoyment of economic, social and cultural rights.”¹⁰ The UK Government has also committed to reduce inequalities, in its sign-up to the UN’s Sustainable Development Goals, which features reducing inequalities as Goal 10.¹¹

Since 2017, Just Fair¹² and The Equality Trust¹³ have been campaigning together for the UK Government to enact the socio-economic duty in England. An Early Day Motion on the commencement and enforcement of the socio-economic duty in the 2017-2019 UK Parliament received support from 83 cross party MPs.¹⁴

GMPA is working with Just Fair and the Equality Trust to explore how the socio-economic duty can be voluntarily adopted by public bodies in Greater Manchester. GMPA believes adoption of a local socio-economic duty is an important element of an effective framework for tackling poverty and economic inequality locally.¹⁵

Why the duty is important now

In recovering from COVID-19, we have the opportunity to rebuild a more equal society. The socio-economic duty offers a powerful tool for public authorities to actively consider the way in which their policies and strategic decisions can address inequalities.
